Summer Course

Digital Justice

June 17th-21st 2019

The Summer Course on Digital Justice (hereinafter: Summer Course) is organized by the University of Palermo's PhD Program on "Human Rights: Evolution, Protection and Limits", in cooperation with the PhD Program on "Legal Pluralisms. Old and contemporary perspectives".

The aim of the 2019 Summer Course on "Digital Justice" is to explore the complex relationships between law and digital technologies. Every day two or three seminars will be held on the most relevant aspects related to technological revolution and on the impact of the ongoing changes for law.

The first day will be dedicated to framing the general theme: from identifying the meaning of the words to a first recognition of the issues in the field. Starting from the second day, we will discuss some of the most important issues related to the impact of technologies on law: human rights, ethics, democracy, markets, adjudication, legal process and law enforcement.

The approach adopted during the Summer Course will always be deeply multi-disciplinary and intercultural. Each topic will be discussed from various theoretical and practical perspectives, with the aim of achieving the effective integration of different methods and solutions. In order to encourage active participation, the PhD students will be engaged in a workshop related to the topics discussed in the various sessions, with the support of a recommended bibliography and made available to the participants.

The works will take place in English, Spanish or Italian, depending on the preference of the speakers and the composition of the audience.

METHODOLOGY

The activities of the Summer Course will be divided into daily seminar sessions and in two workshop sessions. In seminar sessions, experts on the subject will hold one or two seminars with an indicative duration of 45 minutes; each intervention will be commented by a discussant, chosen among the PhD students, who will start a debate on the subject of the report. In order to encourage a proactive participation to the activities of the Summer

Course, by the end of May the seminars' summaries will be made available to the members, as well as the bibliographic indications for the study of the topics under discussion.
